This 1.72 million square foot building serves as the headquarters for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and is comprised of offices, 35 television and radio studios, viewing galleries and a visitor center. The long rectangular sides of the complex are broken up with varied glass colors while unity is provided by the large scale white and red mullion grids. Offices and studios are grouped around a 10,000 square foot central atrium topped with a skylight and a cylinder of reflective glass defines the main entrance. Corridors converge from the different entrances toward the atrium. From the exterior, the main broadcast studios are expressed as discreet volumes in the façade.
